Women's World Cup

In 2019, the eighth Women's World Cup will be held. It has been held every four years since it was created in 1991. This international football competition sees teams compete against each other to become the champions.

An Unofficial Start

Women's football has been attracting crowds of fans for over 100 years. Many popular women's football teams provided much-loved entertainment throughout the World Wars. However, in 1921, the Football Association said that football as a sport was 'quite unsuitable for females'. They said that it 'ought not to be encouraged' and banned women from playing matches in the grounds of Football Association clubs.

This ban was finally lifted in 1971. In this year, the first unofficial Women's World Cup was held in Mexico. This competition saw six national teams competing against each other in three groups. Although Mexico, Argentina, England, Denmark, France and Italy all competed for the prize, only the game between France and Denmark was officially accepted as an international women's football match.

The First Official Competition

Finally, in 1988, a women's football competition was held in China. This competition was a test to see if a Women's World Cup would be a success. Twelve national teams competed for the prize. After a tense penalty shootout to decide third place, the competition was called a huge success. The first official Women's World Cup was held in China three years later.
